

Rules for commenting on UKrant.nl

We always appreciate people commenting on our articles. But we do want you to respect other people's opinions. We also want you to realise that your comments impact other people. So please, think before you post.

There are some guidelines we expect you to follow when commenting on our website. We reserve the right to ban you if you don't follow these guidelines and remove comments that don't abide by them, without corresponding with the person who posted them.

The rules are as follows:

1. No ad hominem arguments: stick to the contents and arguments presented.
2. Get your facts straight; do not write things that are blatantly untrue.
3. Insults, hurtful remarks, discrimination, baiting people, bullying, crude language, mudslinging, etc. will not be tolerated.
4. Comments containing external links will be assessed by the editors and may be removed.
5. Repeatedly responding to similar themes with the same message will be considered 'nagging'. These comments will also be removed, as they don't contribute anything to the discussion.
6. We do not tolerate racism, sexism, homophobia, or any other form of hate speech.
7. We remove responses that constitute copyright infringement.
8. Any advertising or spam comments will be deleted.
9. Make sure your contribution is relevant. That means all comments have to be on topic.
10. Comments have a 1,000-character limit. Keep yours short and to the point. Spreading out a long comment over several takes is not allowed; these will be deleted.
